Stage 2
Focus groups were held to obtain insight into Delawareans' versions of the Delaware Dream, in part to further explore how libraries can support economic development.

Abstract:

The purpose is to develop a methodology to strategically support lifelong learning and economic development, to measure outcomes, and to showcase library value at scale across the state of Delaware.

Resources are a result of delivering value to the customer.

"Belief that the library is a transformational force in people's lives is directly related to their level of funding"

-DeRosa (2011), Geek the Library: A community awareness campaign

Stage 3
An organizing tool for library services using Maslow's Hierarchy of Needs (y axis) with Dewey (x axis) is in testing to track progression toward achieving transformational goals.

The objective is to ensure that library services address current needs, while also offering a sampling across all major subject areas so that Delawareans can discover new interests and passions to explore and develop.

Findings:

Aligning outputs by subject using a single classification system (Dewey) enables us to look across library services from the view of the patron, what the patrons are trying to do.

Using an organizing tool for library services (Maslow Dewey Chart) helps libraries to be strategic and developmental in the services that they offer.

Practical Implications/Value:

This project is primarily focused on public libraries but has practical implications of value in supporting curriculum in academic, school, and special libraries as well.

Patron use by subject (Dewey) allows for spotting emerging trends earlier, so that libraries can be at the forefront of serving community needs.

The Maslow Dewey organizer provides guidance for strategic development of library programs and services to ensure libraries are aiming high and providing significant value in achieving community goals.
